

Book Font Survey

Thank you for taking part in this survey on the readability of fonts. Your feedback will be used to help decide which font to use in our dyslexic friendly books.

By returning your completed survey, you consent to our handling of the data you provide. Please see the final page for more details. Please DO NOT include any personal information in your responses.

If you downloaded a digital copy, print the pages at 100% size to review. Please DO NOT review it on screen as this will invalidate your results.

Return your paper copy to:
Books On The Hill, Hill Road, Clevedon, North Somerset
BS21 7PL

Or email your responses to: info@booksonthehill.co.uk

Please look at each set of three pages (one set per font) and indicate in the table opposite:

1. The smallest size of the font you can comfortably read.
2. The closest line spacing of the font you can comfortably read

Put a "X" if you could not read any of the size/spacing options

	Font Size	Line Spacing
Arial
Open Dyslexic
Tahoma
Verdana

Next, consider all of the fonts and indicate which you find easier to read, and which are more difficult by ranking them from best = 1, to worst = 4. Please use one number per font, and don't give two the same number.

	Rank
Arial
Open Dyslexic
Tahoma
Verdana

ARIAL

Font size - please choose the smallest you can comfortably read:

10 pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

11pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

12pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

13pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

14pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

Line Spacing - look at the next 2 pages.

Please choose the closest you can comfortably read.

1.25 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.5 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.75 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but...

2.0 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the...

OPEN DYSLEXIC

Font size - please choose the smallest you can comfortably read:

9 pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way in...

10pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way in...

11pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way in....

12pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

13pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

Line Spacing - look at the next 2 pages.

Please choose the closest you can comfortably read.

1.25 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.5 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her...

1.75 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

2.0 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once...

TAHOMA

Font size - please tick the smallest you can comfortably read:

10 pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

11pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

12pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into...

13pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

14pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

Line Spacing - look at the next 2 pages.

Please choose the closest you can comfortably read.

1.25 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.5 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.75 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but...

2.0 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the...

VERDANA

Font size - please tick the smallest you can comfortably read:

10 pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

11pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

12pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into...

13pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into the Kepler Project press conference.

14pt:

Ruth Anders held her pass up to the security guard at the door.

He inspected it closely. "You're running a little late," he said. "Local press are at the back, if you'd like to take a seat." He pushed the door open for her.

Ruth thanked him and made her way into...

Line Spacing - look at the next 2 pages.

Please choose the closest you can comfortably read.

1.25 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd always wanted to travel and see places like this, but she never seemed to have the money, or the time. Or the courage, a small voice inside added.

1.5 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place enchanted her and pushed away the sense of dread. She ran her hands over the moss covered walls. She'd...

1.75 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the ancient road towards the structures in the trees.

The lonely beauty of the place...

2.0 line spacing

She couldn't see any roads, or any gaps in the trees to suggest where a road could be. There were no parking lots or modern buildings. Perhaps this wasn't a popular tourist destination. Had she escaped being blown up just to die alone, lost in some jungle, God knows where? Fear settled in her stomach like a mass of writhing snakes.

There were more ruins, not pyramids, but smaller structures, poking out between the trees. Maybe there would be signs or something to give her a clue which way to walk. She descended the steps and skirted the bottom of the pyramid. On the far side, patches of stone peeked through the grass, suggesting the area had once been paved. She followed the...

GDPR Statement

Thank you for agreeing to take part in this survey.

Responses will be received and processed by Alistair Sims and/or Chrissey Harrison, on behalf of Books on the Hill publishing.

We respect your right to privacy and therefore your personal information (any information which allows your survey responses to be attributed to you as an individual, or traced to back to you in any way) will not be recorded*.

Your original responses will be retained for up to 1 month from the date of receipt. During this time, they will be transcribed from the original paper or email record, which will then be destroyed securely.

Any question responses which we consider to contain personal data (i.e. traceable to you as an individual) will not be transcribed.

The remaining data, comprised of responses in anonymous form, will be retained indefinitely.

Your full survey responses will not be shared with any third party. Results, in anonymous summary form, may be shared with third parties.

If you provided your personal information in order to receive or return the survey, this information will not be linked to your response, and will not be retained or processed, unless you previously consented to our storage and use of that data (e.g. you joined the Books on the Hill mailing list), in which case the former policy you agreed to applies.

*By nature of the fact we may know you personally, it's possible the individuals receiving the data may know whose survey is whose in some cases, but this data will never be recorded or disclosed.

If you have any questions or concerns, please contact Alistair at Books on the Hill. Contact information is available at <https://www.booksonthehill.co.uk/contact-us/>